

The People Have Spoken

The 2018-midterm elections are now history. No one, Republican or Democrat, can claim victory, but somehow both parties remain relevant. From the people's perspective, the result is an ideal situation that constrains activities threatening our liberties. Both parties, if they act responsibly, will cut the foul rhetoric, contention, and mob-rule. They all need to concentrate on solving the problems facing our Republic.

None of our elected officials lives in poverty, and all get enormous benefits at taxpayer expense. They do not personally deal with the anguish of many voters, finding good schools for their children, or facing a world devoid of opportunity. Elected officials reside behind walls, protected from unchecked immigration, homeless shack-cities, feces on the sidewalks, and high murder rates. They dine in country clubs, while some citizens try to stretch a dollar to cover the food bill and others have nowhere to live.

Our government needs to work effectively. Stop legislators from exercising a perpetual stream of costly litigation to get even with each other. They must look towards the people, not each other, understand what is required, and get the job done. We pay for their privileged lifestyles. They work for and are accountable to us. The American people need to stand against their inaction.

For those persons still angry about politics, get over it. It only hurts others without making America better. Refocus your aggression towards achieving some good cause. Many situations need your energy, including serving in a food kitchen or building homes for the needy.

We are all neighbors, and cannot afford to be enemies, regardless of color, religion, rich or poor, or any of the MANY categories used to divide us. I will respect your opinion and needs as long as you are civil and respect mine. Working together, we can accomplish anything. Divided, the politicians will rule the world at our expense.

Best regards,

DECISION-MAKING IN A DISRUPTIVE DISORDERING

The common denominators for success in a disruptive world are three-fold.

The first skill is the development of ethical, practical, and fact-based decision-making skills.

The second skill is learning a process, and the tools needed for implementing the decision.

The third skill is applying the process and tools, individually or in a team environment, to achieve the purpose behind the decision.

Using a fact-based paradigm allows us to discern propaganda from facts. Without knowledge, a prosperous, civilized society cannot exist.
